

How common is hearing loss?

Hearing loss affects people of all ages. The graphic below shows percentages of hearing loss by age.

What causes hearing loss?

Excessive noise exposure is the leading cause of hearing loss in the United States in adults.

Ototoxic drugs can cause hearing loss, tinnitus or balance disorders. There are over 200 known medications including: NSAIDS, antibiotics, diuretics, some cardiac medicine and more.

Various illnesses and diseases can be associated with hearing loss. Some include Meningitis, Heart Disease, Diabetes, Ménière's disease and Alzheimer's, among others.

Aging is also a cause of hearing loss. Over time, our ears change and the tiny hair cells that help us hear become damaged and cannot re-grow.

Other factors can lead to a higher risk of hearing loss as well, such as obesity, birth defects, head injuries, family history, smoking and more.

When should I get my hearing checked?

Hearing loss can come on so gradually you may not even notice it's happening. As a rule of thumb, if your hearing test reports your hearing is OK, stick to once every three to five years. You will want to test your hearing annually if you are experiencing any of the following:

- If you are 55 or older
- Exposure to loud noises consistently
- Asking people to repeat themselves constantly
- Feel that people constantly mumble or don't speak clearly
- Have difficulty understanding in a noisy environment or in groups
- Have ringing in your ears

My hearing isn't THAT bad. Do I really need hearing aids?

Even a mild hearing loss can negatively affect key areas of your life, including mental health, physical health and can affect your income. Additionally, untreated hearing loss is usually more noticeable to other people than the actual hearing aids.
